

In Whose Interest: International Banking And American Foreign Policy

'This is a much needed volume that seriously - and often provocatively - explores the emergence of Brazil as a "middle power" in Latin America. The authors, all established specialists, explore the implications and challenges of Brazil's rise and offer intelligent analysis of the myriad scenarios that may or may not play out in the 21st century.'

— Riordan Roett, Director of the Latin American Studies Program, Johns Hopkins University, USA

'For many years Brazil has been considered one of the emerging powers in Latin America. This book is a successful attempt to shed light upon the different perceptions in the countries of our region in the last decade.'

— Patricia Espinosa Cantellano, Minister of Foreign Affairs (2006-2012), Mexico

'This book is really an interesting and overdue contribution. The topic of the interactions between Brazil as a regional power and its neighbours is of interest both for specialists on Latin America and for scholars on rising/regional powers.'

— Detlef Nolte, Director of the GIGA Institute of Latin American Studies, Hamburg, Germany

Brazil's international activism and increased economic weight in the last decade have attracted considerable attention. However, the limitations of its capacity and will to turn potential power into actual international influence are equally significant. So far, relatively little attention has been paid to the diverse ways in which other Latin American countries have perceived, and responded to, the rise of Brazil. This edited volume redresses the gap by answering some crucial questions about the international relations of Latin America: what has been the real impact of the rise of Brazil on other Latin American states? What is the place of Brazil in their foreign policy? What role do extra-regional actors play? What is the weight of domestic factors? Have Latin American countries devised specific strategies to cope with the rise of Brazil? Thirteen case-study chapters answer these questions while providing thought-provoking considerations for other emerging powers and regions.

Gian Luca Gardini is Professor of International Relations and Chair of International Business and Society Relations, with a particular focus on Latin America, at Friedrich Alexander University in Nuremberg, Germany. Among his books are Latin America in the 21st Century and Latin American Foreign Policies between Ideology and Pragmatism.
